

Old and New Exoskeletons

When a nymph comes out of its egg case, it has an exoskeleton.

The hard covering cannot grow, however, and soon becomes too tight.

As the nymph gets bigger, it sheds its old exoskeleton so that a new one can form.

This change is called molting.

After molting six to nine times, a nymph becomes an adult.

